It feels like ages have passed, yet on some days, it seems as fresh as yesterday. The way our brains operate is quite amusing, that is, until they hit a snag and require a reset.

Picture this: it's 5 AM, and a raucous battalion of rowdy frogs has been celebrating through the night, their boisterous cheers for Bud Lite echoing in the stillness.

This ruckus has stirred a group of flamboyant transgender chickens, who, decked out in their big boy rooster pants, have taken to the rooftop.

They clamor for the sun to rise quickly, eager to kick off the new day with all the enthusiasm of a party that just won't quit.

WHAT DID YOU EXPECT?

Dudes, it's 5 AM!

In a frantic attempt to board the departing train that was serious about its 11:30 AM schedule, I found myself in a precarious situation when an official-looking railway security officer unexpectedly thrust his foot into my path.

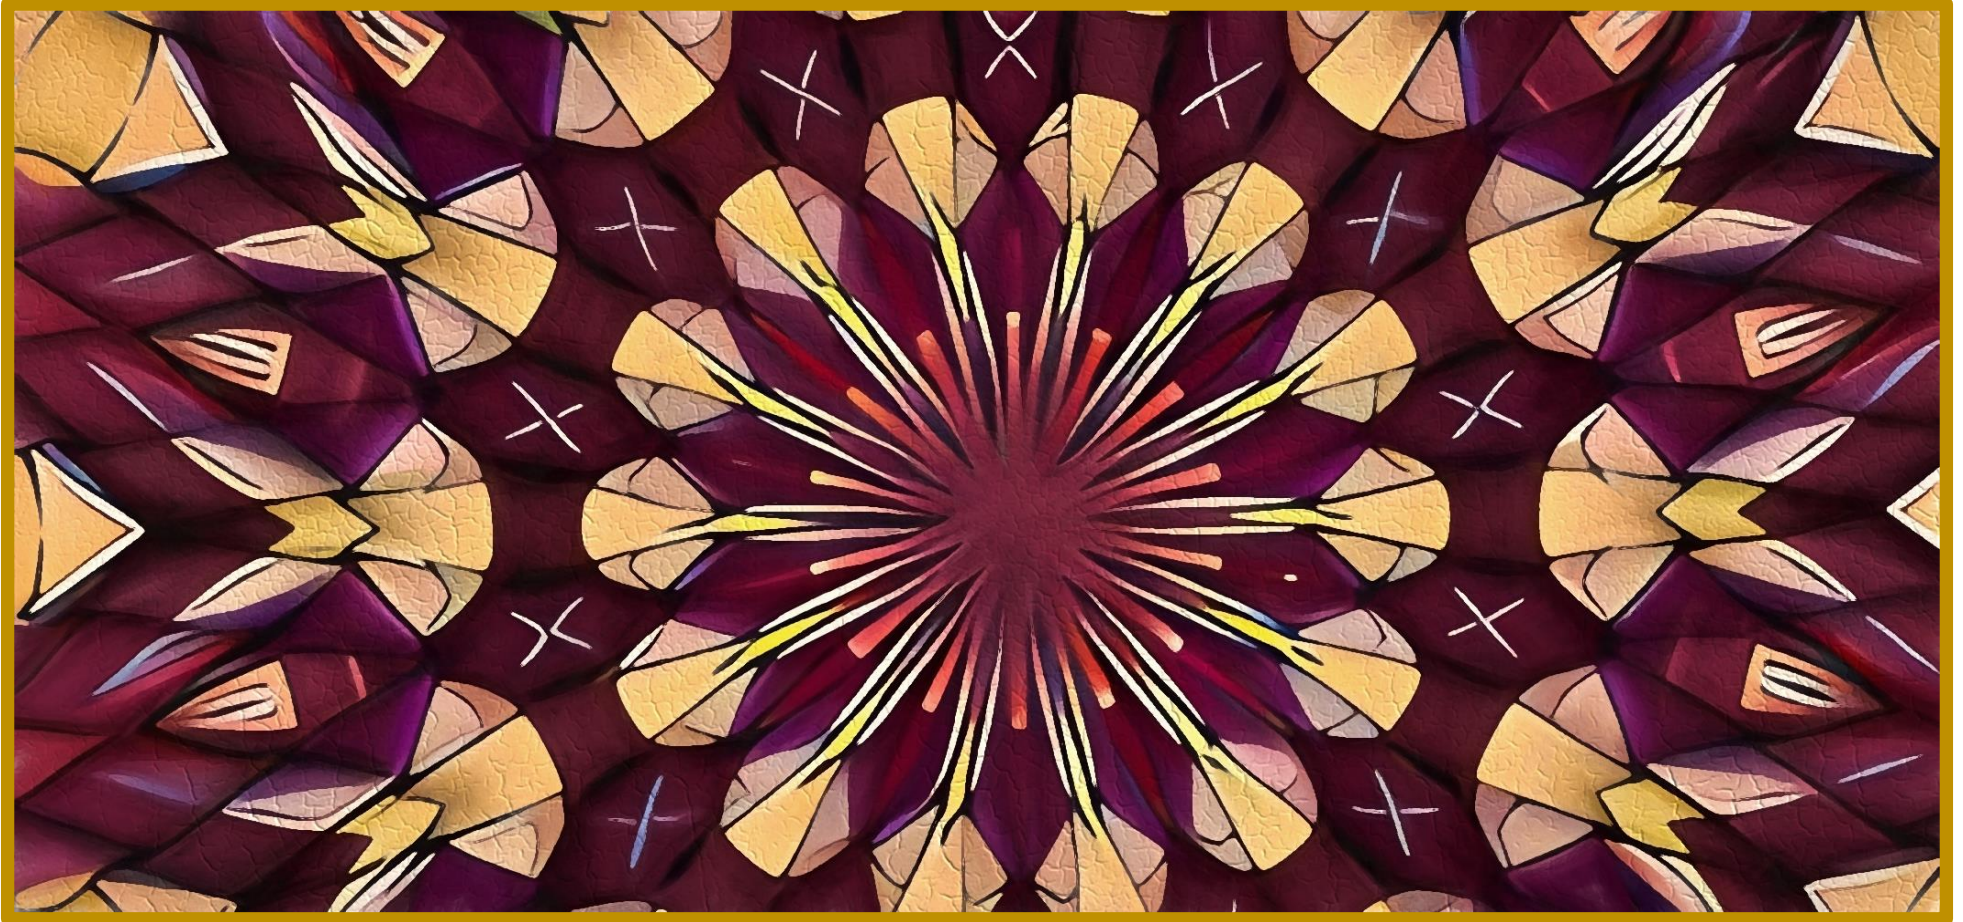

The sudden obstruction sent me tumbling to the ground, a jarring reminder of how quickly plans can derail when you're in a hurry.

He cast his gaze downward and softly murmured into my left ear, which still functioned well, "Sometimes the unfortunate events in our lives lead us directly to the most wonderful experiences we will ever encounter."

In a moment of impulsive reaction, I delivered a swift punch to his stomach, only to quickly realize that I would need to channel the spirit of a young O.J. Simpson—not Bart, although that might have spun a much more humorous tale and potentially garnered enough attention to launch this project onto the now-defunct New York Times Best Seller List. I would have embraced that outcome, had it not been for the intervention of WWWG's Legal Beagle, Miss Kimmie, who informed our editorial board that Bart's agent would undoubtedly sue us for unauthorized use, while invoking O.J.'s name was permissible since he had recently passed away and there was no one here in Singapore to claim his estate. It was at that moment, as the World War II-era train began to gather speed, that the reality struck me: I was going to have to face the consequences of assaulting a railroad official. The situation appeared grim, and I could vividly imagine myself decaying in a damp, mold-infested railway holding cell, biding my time for a transfer to a labor camp reminiscent of the classic film "Cool Hand Luke."

The reason that ancient film popped into my head is something I can't quite grasp, far beyond my cognitive capabilities to explain.

To complicate matters, I find myself unable to seek clarity, largely due to the dismal state of my social credit score, which has recently plummeted to a staggering negative 45,000

I decided to confront the consequences of my actions head-on, embracing the principle of accountability that resonates deeply with the outlawed Jesuits of Truth.

It was an odd and bewildering moment, leaving me to question the very nature of their priorities.

It was undeniably strange to witness, especially after I had just delivered a powerful blow to one of their own, leaving him writhing on the ground in pain.

Despite the chaos unfolding right in front of them, they completely disregarded my presence and sprinted past me as if I were invisible, their focus solely on whatever urgency lay ahead.

As I pivoted on my heels, my eyes fell upon the unfortunate sight of the train I had hoped to board, now rendered inoperable.

An elderly woman, who was peddling sugary snacks and fizzy drinks on the platform, informed me that the train had collided with a farmer's cart, causing it to derail and the station to come to a standstill.

In the moments that followed, I discovered that numerous passengers had sustained injuries after tumbling from the Hanging out the windows?

Nowadays, it has become quite a frequent sight to witness the overwhelming number of passengers cramming into the scarce rail cars.

In their quest for a breath of fresh air, many individuals find themselves leaning out of the windows, seeking a moment of relief amidst the crowded conditions.

There are those who might interpret my lack of arrest as a miraculous event or a sign of divine favor from the Holy Elephant of Joy, while others would scoff at such notions, labeling them as nonsensical religious nonsense.

Instead, they would attribute my fortunate escape to sheer luck, suggesting that I simply happened to be in the right place at the right moment, avoiding the consequences that could have easily befallen me.

Based on my own reflections and the extensive experiences I've gathered throughout my life, I can confidently say that the concept of "being in the right place" has had little to no significant impact on my everyday existence.

Furthermore, I feel fortunate to have what I like to call my own personal, budget-friendly guardian angel, who, despite her good intentions, rarely appears at opportune moments to influence the outcomes of the various situations I frequently encounter.

In the interest of transparency and fairness, it's important to note that my guardian angel is currently operating under a significantly constrained budget, a consequence of recent financial cutbacks implemented by the national headquarters of St. Michael's Guardian Angels LLC.

These cutbacks stem from a series of class action lawsuits that have emerged due to the organization's widely publicized shortcomings in service quality and, in some instances, allegations of corrupt practices involving kickbacks, often

What stands out most in my memory of her is the invaluable advice she offered, particularly when it was accompanied by the delightful perk of a complimentary drink refill.

It's curious how her insightful words have resurfaced in my mind at this moment, reminding me of the impact she had on my life.

The train station buzzed with chaos as throngs of people hurried in every direction, and I decided it would be wise to

In that moment, I carried out my plan unnoticed by most, save for the railway guard who still bore the weight of his recent injuries.

However, there was a fleeting instance when I felt the gaze of someone directed at me, prompting an impulsive reaction. I shouted at the top of my lungs, “New I-Phones over here!”

With a sense of urgency, I quickly gathered my gear and made a swift exit just as the train doors opened and passengers began to spill out onto the scene.

The trains in this area adhere to a classic “first come, first seated” approach to festival seating, and I was at my best when I swiftly made my way to the opposite side of the train, managing to board before the earlier passengers had fully disembarked.

Throughout my years of experience riding these trains, I've come to realize that securing a window seat close to an exit is a skill that can be developed and has proven invaluable. In the midst of the overwhelming crowd that fills every inch of the narrow aisle, having a seat near the exit becomes crucial for a smooth departure at your destination.

It often requires navigating through a sea of passengers who are reluctant to budge, making it essential to position yourself strategically to avoid the hassle of climbing over others who are firmly settled in their spots.

I managed to snag a coveted spot close to the exit, complete with a functioning window, all while traveling in the budget-friendly third-class compartment.

It goes without saying that this situation has caused me to be significantly delayed, resulting in my arrival at the airport just shy of 8 AM, leaving me with barely an hour before my

The airport has recently resumed its operations, a development made possible by the dedicated efforts of field technicians sent from the Free Nations Confederacy, which I discovered is situated in the vast megacity of Canton—part of The New Chinese Republic.

Upon entering the terminal, I was immediately enveloped by the distinct scent of fresh paint, which blended with the strong, almost overwhelming fragrance of commercial cleaning products, all boasting bold claims that they could eliminate any germ in their path.

suddenly, the train jolted to life.

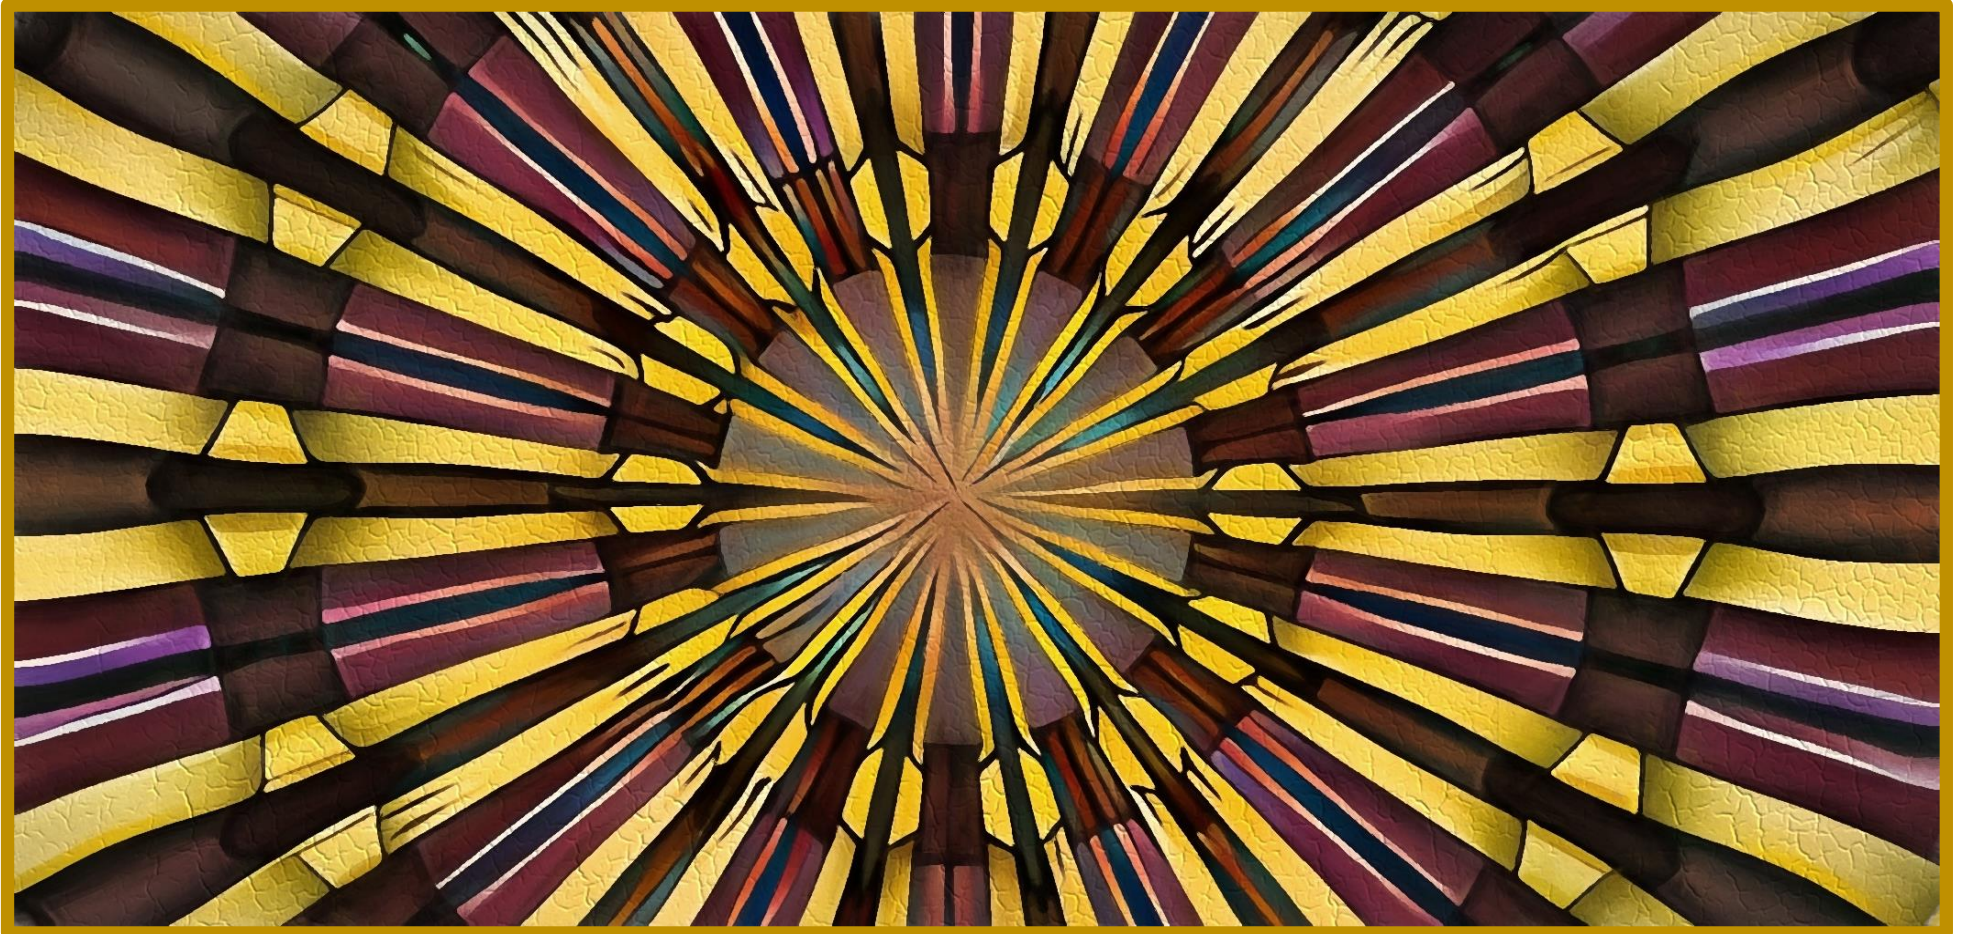

In an unexpected twist, the window panel came crashing down with alarming force, nearly catching my arm, which I had carelessly rested on the windowsill.

Fortunately, my reflexes kicked in like a cat's, sharp and instinctive, allowing me to retract my arm just in time as the window slammed shut with the ominous finality of a rusty guillotine, leaving me both startled and exhilarated by the close call.

Just moments after grappling with the whirlwind of my recent escapade, I found myself reflecting on the strange twist of fate that allowed me to retain the use of my left hand.

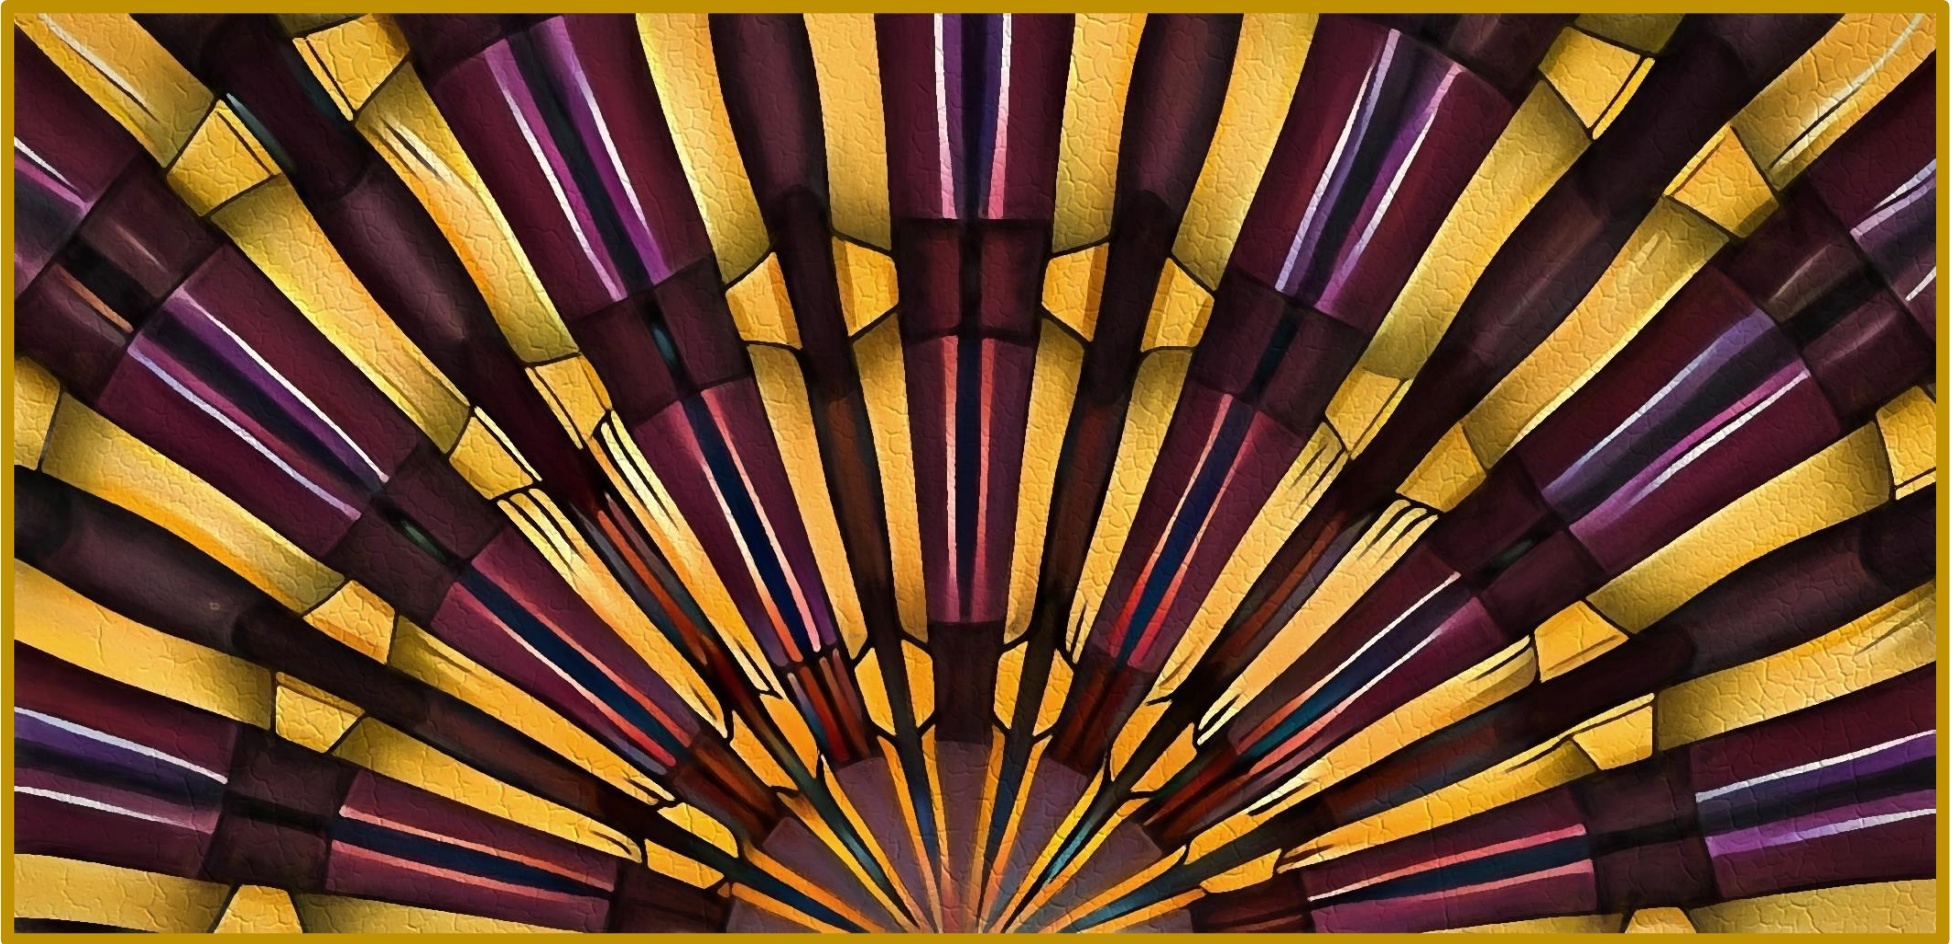

Despite the common belief that the left hand symbolizes the Hand of Satan, it has become my most valuable asset following a harrowing motorcycle racing accident in Germany that resulted in nerve damage to my right hand.

The irony of my situation is not lost on me, as I navigate this new reality with a mix of gratitude and bewilderment, realizing that what once seemed like a curse has transformed into a lifeline in my journey of recovery.

Positioned inherently on God's right side, I found myself facing the challenge of adapting to a new way of writing with my left hand.

This transition was no small feat, but I am grateful for the advent of typewriters and, more recently, computers, which have significantly alleviated the difficulties I encountered during this adjustment period.

Had I not been a proud alumnus of the esteemed Mystery School of Alexandria, particularly through its Home Study Course, I might have fallen prey to the pervasive myth surrounding the dichotomy of right-hand and left-hand paths. This notion, I learned, was merely an ancient Roman Urban Legend concocted by envious senators aiming to tarnish the reputation of Julius Caesar, branding him as a demon associated with the true embodiment of evil, Ahriman, rather than the more familiar figure of Satan.

murmurs, perhaps even speaking in forgotten dialects, firmly believing that destiny had orchestrated a cruel game against me, trapping me in a relentless battle of wits that felt like a fight for survival.

As I took a moment to reflect and align my own harmonic frequency with the rhythmic vibrations of the train gliding along the tracks, I found a serene escape from the throngs of people packed tightly together, resembling sardines in a can.

thoughts regarding the challenges I faced, which I had initially perceived as mere chaotic misfortunes.

Instead, I began to see them as interconnected experiences, each contributing to a larger narrative rather than random occurrences that I had stumbled into without purpose.

Upon further reflection, I find myself recognizing a subtle yet intriguing pattern emerging from what initially seemed like isolated incidents.

These sequences appear to be interconnected in ways that might escape the notice of a casual observer at first glance. Much like the cleverly crafted plots of those often-overlooked Columbo crime dramas, I began to question the randomness of these events.

It struck me that in each instance, I had been rescued at the very last possible moment, prompting me to consider the deeper implications of these fortunate escapes.

Is it really possible?

driven by a nagging suspicion that perhaps I wasn't merely being paranoid. It crossed my mind that, for some unknown reason, she might have been following me since I stepped out of my crib (apartment) this morning.

It's important to recall the advantages of securing a prime seat by the exit with a window on the train, but there's an additional perk worth mentioning: the opportunity to physically escape through the large window.

This particular journey exemplified that benefit, as the aisle was congested with what felt like the entirety of humanity. In such a chaotic scenario, even the most pious individual might have placed a bet on the unlikely chance that I could pull off this daring maneuver and disembark in time to reach the newly reopened international airport. The window turned out to be the clever solution, but there was a brief moment of danger when the train began to pull away, and my backpack got caught on the ledge of the window.

The main reason for my fondness is that it's incredibly hard to come by in most places I visit.

Even when I do spot it at a duty-free shop in an airport, the price is often exorbitant, costing nearly a week's salary for just a single bar.
